The General Strike of 1842

Mick Jenkins

Introduction by John Foster

Extensively illustrated with contemporary prints, this book is the first full length treatment of the 1842 Strike which involved nearly half a million workers all over Britain. The author examines its origins in South-East Lancashire, supplies pen portraits of its outstanding leaders and establishes for the first time the extent of their links with the Chartist movement.

80pp, 21 illustrations. Hardback £9.50. Published March 27.

Culture and Crisis in Britain in the Thirties

Jon Clarke, Margot Heinemann, David Margolis, Carole Sner (eds.)

Contains essays on literature, criticism, Let Britain, cinema and theatre.

'Ian Wright's essay on Lenny and Scrummy is a model of its kind, clearly argued and most carefully documented. ... Peter Widdowson's survey of English fiction is something of a tour de force, in which a range of theory and political perspectives are combined with a sensitive attention to paracultural texts' —

Anthony Arblaster, New Socialist

219pp. Paperback £3.50. Paperback available March 27.

Contents

March 1980 Volume 24 Number 3

Focus 2

Direct Labour — The Tory Bill • The Indian General Election
Back to Front?

Interview with Derek Robinson 5

British Leyland has moved to the centre of the political stage. It is a microcosm of Britain's industrial decline and the failure of government and management policies alike. Now the offensive by Edwardes and the Tories threatens its very existence. Derek Robinson, convenor at Longbridge, discusses the reasons for decline, why the stewards alternative is the way forward for BL and the development of a more powerful trade union presence. The interview was conducted by John Bloomfield.

Kathy Porter

March 8th; International Women's Day 11

International Women's Day has a long history. Kathy Porter, author of a biography of Alexander Kollontai just published by Virago, looks at its development.

Tony Chater

Afghanistan: National Sovereignty and Detente 15

The Soviet action in Afghanistan raises vital questions for the left. Here, Tony Chater, Editor of the Morning Star, discusses some of the broader issues involved.

John Walker

Post-Impressionism 19

The exhibition currently running at the Royal Academy has focused attention on what happened in art after the Impressionists. John Walker, who teaches art history at Middlesex Polytechnic, looks at the exhibition and what this phase in art meant.

Discussion 22

Bernard Dix Thatcherism - a new stage?

Asst General Secretary of NUPE, Bernard Dix, continues this important discussion.

Brian Pollitt Stalin - a centenary view

The author looks at Soviet developments in the twenties.
