David Plotke

Reagan: is it as bad as it sounds? 6

A right-wing Republican is now US President. American politics has shifted to the right. David Plotke, an editor of the American journal Socialist Review, examines the extent of this shift and the prospects for the US and the world with Reagan in the White House.

Fred Steward

The Politics of Technology 13

Technological issues are now big politics. A few examples—microprocessing, nuclear power, Concorde, juggernauts—suffice to make the point. Fred Steward, a lecturer in technology policy at Aston University and member of the Communist Party's Science and Technology Committee, looks at why technology has become such a hot political and social question—and argues that the Left must develop a coherent view on the direction and control of technology.

Tony Lane

Merseyside under the hammer 18

Jarrow and the South Wales mining villages both evoke memories of the thirties depression. Merseyside threatens to become a symbol of unemployment in the eighties. Tony Lane, at present a research officer for the TGWU based in Liverpool and author of The Unions Make us Strong, looks at Merseyside's plight and the growth of resistance.

Discussion 22

Communism and Philosophy

Contemporary Dogmas
and Revisions of Marxism

Maurice Cornforth

This new work undertakes a major reassessment of the legacy of 'classical Marxism', subjecting the 'Marxist Classics' themselves to critical scrutiny, against the background of the ever-growing debate on Marxist theory and its implementation in the socialist countries and in the West.
