Adolfo Gilly

The Mexican Revolution

The Mexican Revolution began modestly in 1910: an a modernizing bourgeoisie sought to resolve the worsening tensions of the old oligarchic state through a programme of political reform. But, as the southern peasantry raised the explosive demand for land reform, a rapidly developed into the first great popular revolution of the new century. Gilly's classic study of the Mexican Revolution, which has gone through fourteen editions in the Spanish original, is now, for the first time, available in English in this specially revised edition.

Carmen Sirianni

Workers' Control and Socialist Democracy
The Soviet Experience

Carmen Sirianni undertakes a comprehensive study of the forms of popular power that emerged in the course of the struggle against Tsarism, and their destiny in the formative years of the vast Soviet state. Her examination of the tensions between working class and peasant initiatives and demands, and Bolshevik (political) and economic conceptions, deepens our understanding, both of the Russian Revolution, and of central unresolved issues of socialism.

Parliament, People and Power
Agenda for a Free Society

In these interviews with New Left Review, Tony Benn discusses the impact of the political experience of the past thirty years on the evolution of his own thinking. Michèle Barrett & Mary McIntosh

The Anti-social Family

Michèle Barrett and Mary McIntosh dissect the network of household, kinship and sexual relations that make up the dominant family form in advanced capitalist societies. Against this they propose some elements of a moral and political practice directed beyond the family towards more egalitarian and caring alternatives. Barrett and McIntosh have written a sensitive socialist-feminist critique of the 'anti-social family'.

Jean-Paul Sartre

Critique of Dialectical Reason

At the height of the Algerian War - Sartre embarked on a fundamental reappraisal of his own philosophical and political thought. The result was the Critique de la Raison Dialectique, in which he set out the basic categories for a renovated theory of history that he believed was necessary for post-war Marxism. This is the essential counterpart and criticism of his earlier Being and Nothingness.

A New Force in the Land 7

A roundtable discussion with Sally Davison, Helen John and Joan Ruddock

The Greenham Common Women's Peace Camp has captured the imagination of the country.
It represents a new kind of politics. But what can — and can't — it do?

Chris Pond

Taxation: a political liability 15

In 1979, a major reason for the Tory victory was the promise to cut income tax. It hasn't happened. But taxation remains a key problem which the Left has neglected.

Dave Cook and Peter Hain

Proportional representation: threat or opportunity? 20

The emergence of the Alliance has put proportional representation much higher on the political agenda. The Left remains very divided on its own attitude. Here we present two conflicting views.

Harold Immanuel

Sizewell Syndrome 28

The Tory government is committed to a massive programme of nuclear power stations.
Sizewell 'B' would be the first of many. But all the signs are that this is going to become — for the first time — a major political issue.

Doug Cook

Lessons of the NHS Dispute 33

The author looks at the recent health workers struggle.
