Intelligent fellows like Anthony Crosland have no sympathy for the old-fashioned nonsense which was once considered to be Socialism. He, it was, who disparaged the policy of UNIVERSITIES AND LEFT REVIEW by describing it as "simply pre-, or anti-, revisionist." We regret to say that Tribune suffers from the same defect.

Indeed, browsing through TRIBUNE 21, our coming-of-age anthology (out in time for Christmas), I notice that many of our recent contributors have simply repeated the principles and sentiments uttered some twenty years ago by such stuffy, old pre-revisionist contributors as Pandit Nehru, Sir Stafford Cripps, George Orwell, Harold Laski, George Bernard Shaw and H. G. Wells. Such is progress.

We are not so out-of-date, however, to spurn the services of modern methods of distribution. Thanks to trains, trucks and telephones you can get a copy of Tribune, price sixpence, from any newsagent or from 222 Strand, London, W.C.2.

Autumn book list

Conviction

Edited by Norman Mackenzie 18s

'The most stimulating, heartening and intelligent manifesto to come from the Left for a very long time indeed.' Economist. 'I cannot imagine that anybody, whatever his political views, will read it without profit.' Sunday Times.

The Good Lion

Len Doherty 18s

'Very good indeed . . . excellent descriptions of action, boxing matches, dance-hall rough-houses, and a pit accident. Mr. Doherty is a born writer and plainly a man of great intelligence.' New Statesman. 'Gets to grips with the sort of life that people really live.' Manchester Guardian.

River Giant

Roger Curel 15s

'Much of the savage charm of Africa is captured in this story of two Frenchmen and an African who unite to destroy a huge, almost mythical, hippopotamus. The pursuit of the animal is incidental to a powerful description of the life and customs of the people of Central Africa.' Times Weekly Review.

The Gravy Train

Edmund Ward 15s

'This book is strongly recommended, particularly for its caustic dialogue and wit.' Times Literary Supplement. 'The pomposity, hospitality and friendliness of Joe's American friends are most happily observed. Mr. Ward excels at this kind of quietly sardonic portraiture.' The Times.

Idle on Parade

William Camp 15s

'Extremely funny.' JOHN BETJEMAN, Daily Telegraph. 'Very funny — life in a Guards regiment as seen by a quietly unmilitary man who prefers girls to arms drill.' Observer. 'Wodehouse on the drill-square.' Daily Mail. 'A genuinely funny book that reads itself.' New Statesman.

Crossing the Line

Claud Cockburn 18s

'The most engaging of historians, the most persuasive of story-tellers, the liveliest political gad-fly of an age.' Times Literary Supplement. 'Vintage Cockburn; astringently witty, sardonically perceptive, the prose a delight to read.' Sunday Times.

Second Chorus

Humphrey Lyttelton 15s

'Takes jazz seriously but never runs into absurdity. Packed with perception and sound sense.' Sunday Times. 'In literature, as in music, Humph has style, intelligence, and considerable personality. He is, in fact, a natural writer and raconteur.' New Statesman.

Honey and Gall

Emmanuel d'Astier 15s

This novel traces the lives of Antoine and Nadiejda against the historical background of the last forty years. We meet them first as children; in Paris between the wars; and finally, married with the coming of peace.

Olaf

Godfrey Lias 18s

The true life adventure story of a modern Viking who has sought adventure all over the world.

RAYMOND WILLIAMS

Culture and Society 1780-1950

The author is concerned with the idea of culture as it has developed in Britain during this period, 'culture' being considered throughout in terms of social relations as well as in its purely artistic sense. He traces the growth of this idea through Burke, Cobbett, the Romantic poets, J. S. Mill, Carlyle, Arnold, Ruskin, Shaw, Lawrence, Eliot, Tawney, and the Marxist critics.

'An intelligent and sensitive critic . . . a remarkable combination of human sympathy and analytic severity' New Statesman

'Full of challenging ideas' The Times

'Brilliantly intelligent . . . a good critic and also an original thinker' Sunday Times

'Clear and stimulating' Manchester Guardian 30s. net
